Twentieth Century Snow Job

The dawn of 1970 finds American youth in rebellion. The new generation has revolted against the only form of government they have ever known, the political philosophy of "liberalism." For almost seventy years the unique American system has been sustained by a deadly propaganda stemming from Wall Street and Park Avenue, and in later years from the many well subsidized "think tanks" dotting the landscape from Virginia to Connecticut and beyond.

Revolution against the system is long overdue and it may be for the best that the young and vigorous have launched it. Certain it is that the "over thirty" groups are incompetent to lead or direct a revolt against the monster they have, through a life-time of propagandized ignorance, created and permitted to flourish.

The strength of the revolution lies not with those who riot, burn, and shout obscenities on campus and in the streets, but rather in the millions of young people who have become aware that the whole fabric of the society of their dreams is a fraud and a deception. They face the same dilemma that confronted the youth of the 1900 to 1905 era when a group of economics students discovered that about thirty American families had acquired, by hook or crook, and mostly the latter, so much of the nation's wealth that there was very little left for the remainder of the population. The producers of the wealth of the nation, labor and management alike, were in relative poverty while the non-producers, the gamblers and speculators, syphoned off the fruits of their production.

The purpose of this tract is to explore and debunk the system and the personalities running the system as a prelude to competent evaluation of a "democratic" system which never actually existed. For about one hundred and twenty five years (until 1913) we had a Republic which functioned efficiently. With the advent of the Wilson Administration the propaganda machines set up by the internationalists of the Federal Reserve system, and Wall Street speculators, there began a "snow job" on the American people, and in collusion with banker affiliates worldwide, they have jobbed the entire world for their own profit and power. These, and not the "communists," are establishing world government. Their aims could not have been achieved without complete control of a common communications media in the hands of an international Money Trust.

It must be obvious that without the control of money, worldwide, there could be no control of world government. The power of money, worldwide, would prevent anybody else from establishing world government or of waging wars which might result in any diminishing of their own powers. The people could be effectively controlled by only one method and that was through control of communications; they would be taught to believe what the money trust and War Lords of New York desired them to believe. At the end of seventy years the "snow job" is practically complete. When an older generation began hearing about "thought control" to be imposed upon them by an over-educated "elite," they brushed it off as the raving of "screwballs" and "crack-pots." The enormity of that error is evident now in the complete domination by this insolent element over the government, the educational system, and a submissive people.

The wealthiest men in America early in the century formed an organization of themselves and their intellectual lackeys, the Council on Foreign Relations, which affiliated with similar organizations all over the world for the purpose of creating a world government to be ruled by them. Their objective is a world-wide feudal system to be financed almost exclusively by the taxes they levy against the producers and the property in the United States. Part of the scheme included control of education. This was accomplished through Foundations created by them for the purpose of bribing universities and teachers through the "grant" racket, to teach what the Money Trust and the War Lords desired. They began with the teachers colleges, (Columbia being the first experiment) and in time "thought controlled" all except a tiny minority of students. The power of propaganda is such that the minority was never heard—they were branded as "kooks" before they had an opportunity to speak out. The propaganda asserted that the majority, including the teachers and professors, were outstanding exponents of academic freedom.

The many books written by Conservatives, Reactionaries and real Liberals were banned from the school and community libraries; their publications and periodicals were attacked viciously; and the snow job of propaganda held sway in centers of public "communications." Now students have become aware that much of what they had been taught was simply not true. They wonder just what is truth and where to find it, as they rebel against the institutions destroyed by propaganda.

We have in mind two books, both now out of print and well worth a search in old book stores. These show clearly and fearlessly how the vultures of the money trust and war lords bought up newspapers and magazines throughout this century for the purpose of deceiving the people while they plundered the nation and destroyed the flower of American youth in perpetual wars from which they profited enormously both from trade in war munitions and in INTEREST on their foreign loans. They are never much concerned about the principal in these transactions; it is the INTEREST they are after, thousands of millions of dollars' worth annually. It is this debt that prior misinformed Americans leave as a heritage—to the youth in rebellion.

Both of the books above referred to were written by Liberals. The contents are concurrent with the situation today; many of the names are still with us, for the crimes and treasons described by the writers appear to be of a hereditary nature. The Gustavus Myers book, "History of the Great American Fortunes," deals in considerable detail with the crimes and swindles of such as: the J. P. Morgan partners, the Goulds, Vanderbilts, Rockefellers, Harrimans, Astors, etc. Stock swindles, looting of the public domain, bribery of public officials, rigged commodity markets, exploitation of labor and small business, manipulated bank failures—these represented the rugged moral fibre of our great civic leaders of the early twentieth century. This was the system against which the youth of the early 1900's rebelled. Such was the situation in that day which required wholesale purchase of the news media.

In the book of Ferdinand Lundberg, America's Sixty Families, the manner in which our Presidents are "elected" is discussed freely and the contributions of the wealthy who expect to profit from the administration they set up in business, is revealing although not altogether inspiring. Students of this age realize that the people really do not select the Presidents although they go through the motions of "electing" those already hand-picked by mysterious figures behind the scenes.

Assuming that the wealthiest men in America with a stranglehold on the money and credit of the nation, and living mostly within a small area in New York and other Eastern states, have bought control of the news media—press, magazines, radio, television, wire services, and advertising agencies—how would they go about selecting candidates for the Presidency? Candidates will be selected by the group. Then the news media would begin a build-up—a gigantic snow job through press and television. In our thoroughly propaganda-drugged nation, no man can compete with the power of the press. If he attempts it, he will be ridiculed, smeared and obstructed at every turn. We must vote for one of the candidates selected for us; for example: Herbert Hoover, Thomas E. Dewey, Dwight Eisenhower, Adlai Stevenson, John F. Kennedy, Hubert Humphrey, Richard Nixon, George Romney, Henry Cabot Lodge, Averell Harriman, Nelson Rockefeller, all were members of the Council on Foreign Relations, and hand-picked by the Council's billionaire members. All were built up by the Council's propaganda news media.

Let Lundberg (America's Sixty Families) describe the "purposes and principles" (UN Charter) of the propaganda media:

"Truth, in established journalism, is always secondary and very often is incidental, even accidental . . .

"So far as can be learned the Rockefellers have given up their old policy of owning newspapers and magazines outright, relying now upon the publications of all camps to serve their best interests in return for the vast volume of petroleum and allied advertising under Rockefeller control. After the J. P. Morgan block, the Rockefellers have the most national advertising of any group to dispose of. And when advertising alone is not sufficient to insure the fealty of a newspaper, the Rockefeller companies have been known to make direct payments in return for a friendly editorial attitude.

" . . . When John D. Rockefeller was faced, in the nineteenth century, with a press barrage of denunciation, he started acquiring newspapers and magazines right and left through hired agents. One of the first papers acquired by Rockefeller was the influential Oil City (Penna.) Derrick, which immediately changed from his worst foe to his staunchest apologist. This was in 1885. Charles Matthews, a Standard Oil employee, then purchased the Buffalo Peoples' Journal and published it on behalf of Rockefeller. Next, Patrick Boyle, Rockefeller's agent in charge of The Derrick, acquired for Rockefeller a Toledo newspaper which launched into an attack on the opponents of the grant of natural gas distributions of franchises of two Rockefeller companies.

"After this there was formed the Jennings Publishing Company which, as Attorney General Francis Monnet of Ohio later found, had contracts with 110 Ohio newspapers under the terms of which they were to publish laudatory articles and editorials about Standard Oil and the Rockefeller henchmen. In 1893 Rockefeller endowed the University of Chicago, which published the Journal of Political Economy . . .

"International Paper Company (Rockefeller), it was revealed, owned secret interests in the Chicago Daily Journal, the Albany Knickerbocker Press, the Albany Evening News (Gannett), the Boston Herald Traveler, the Brooklyn Eagle (Gannett), the Augusta (Ga.) Chronicle, the Spartanburg (S. C.) Herald Journal, and the Ithaca Journal News, and had endeavored to purchase more than twenty-five additional metropolitan newspapers. After exposure International Paper divested itself of newspaper holdings and gave up negotiations for others . . .

"In 1916 the (N. Y.) Sun passed into the hands of Frank Munsey who had long been functioning as a paid tool of Morgan, and Munsey merged it with the Press he had acquired in 1912 . . . Munsey had always been a mystery to rank and file journalists because of the way he bought and ruthlessly liquidated newspapers . . . Munsey put to death newspapers that were inimical, in one way or another, to J. P. Morgan and Company, and founded newspapers that sang the praises of projects in which J. P. Morgan and Company happened to be interested.

"In 1901 Munsey bought the New York Daily News and the Washington Times, selling the latter in 1917 to Hearst. He bought the Boston Journal and killed it the next year along with the Boston Evening News. These acquisitions and discontinuances closely followed the floatation of the United States Steel Corporation and the International Harvester Company by J. P. Morgan and Company, in both of which enterprises the foundation of Munsey's $40,000,000 fortune was laid. The Munsey papers whooped it up for the new Morgan trusts.

" . . . The Post (N.Y. Evening) had passed into the hands of Henry Villiard, promoter of the Northern Pacific Railroad, whose son Oswald inherited it. Soon after giving up the Evening Post, Lamont (Morgan) privately financed Henry Seidel Canby in founding The Saturday Review of Literature, which has for nearly two decades given J. P. Morgan and Company a strategic foothold in the book publishing business . . . Lamont, however, has been less important as a newspaper owner than as a silent manipulator of the press. For many years he was a director of the Crowell Publishing Company which publishes the American Magazine, the Country Home, Collier's Weekly and Woman's Home Companion, all with huge national circulations. Since Lamont's departure the Morgan interest in Crowell has been represented by Director A. H. Lockett, who is also a director of Newmont Mining Corporation, of Lamont Corliss and Company and of Newsweek (Astor-Mellon-Harriman-Whitney-Cheney), national popular news magazine.

"Perhaps the most direct and significant journalistic connection is with Time Inc., publisher of the weekly circulating TIME news magazine. FORTUNE, chief apologist for the wealthy families, LIFE, largest picture magazine. . . (Judge) Louis D. Brandeis, in questioning for the government C. S. Mellen of the New Haven Railroad, Mellen admitted that more than one thousand New England newspapers were on the New Haven payroll . . ."

Most of the above named newspapers and magazines are still in circulation, operated by the same families and serving the same interests, mainly keeping the reading public misinformed and manageable. The purpose of newspaper ownership by monopolists and cartelists is self protection. They must guard against rebellion among the people who are being systematically swindled by the vultures of international finance.

Another "out of print" book of more recent vintage is Morris A. Beale's House of Rockefeller. This book describes the manner in which the largest corporations in the country use their advertising money to control vast numbers of newspapers, magazines and television stations, in addition to the wire services themselves. The airlines have replaced the railroads as recipients of hand-outs from the public treasury and maintain a demand on the part of the public through propaganda. When the money trust completely dominates the communications media, particularly the three largest television corporations, "thought control" becomes a stark reality.

In 1901, a time when a dollar was the equivalent of ten dollars now, a managing editor of the New York Times, Mr. Swinton, stated at a dinner given in his honor upon retirement:

"There is no such thing in New York as an independent press. You know it, and I know it. There is not one of us who dares write his honest opinions, and if you did, you would know beforehand they would never appear in print.

"I am paid $150 a week for keeping my honest opinions out of the paper I am connected with. Others are paid similar salaries for similar things. Anyone who would be so foolish as to write his honest opinions would be out on the streets looking for another job.

"The business of the New York journalist is to destroy the truth, to lie outright, to pervert, to villify, to fawn at the feet of Mammon, and to sell his race and his country for his daily bread. We are tools and vassals of rich men behind the scenes. We are jumping jacks. They pull the strings and we dance. Our talents are the property of other men. We are intellectual prostitutes."

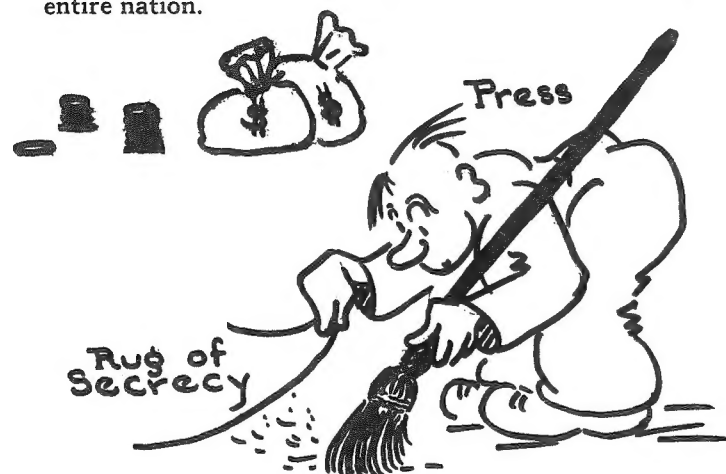

Mr. Beale in discussing the manner in which he has been propagandized into volunteering for service in World War One says:

"He was one of the first to volunteer. Years after, as editor of the Wall Street debunking magazine PLAIN TALK, he learned what a dupe he had been, and to this day he only believes half of what he reads in the newspapers. Or even less."

The same men who control the news media have established billionaire Foundations through which they control schools and universities. The Foundation "grant" is simply a bribe to the teachers and universities to teach what provides the best protection to the mostly ill-gotten gains of the founders and the inexhaustible funds of the Money Trust and the War Lords. In his General Education Board letter No. 1, John D. Rockefeller stated it succinctly:

"The present educational conventions fade from our minds, and unhampered by tradition, we work our own good will upon a grateful and responsive rural folk."

About the middle of the 20th century, an impoverished immigrant, calling himself Sam Newhouse, appeared on the American scene, and within a few years began buying up influential newspapers as they had never been bought before. Many large newspapers—those, perhaps, too large to handle—failed and went out of business. The Newhouse exploits have reinforced the awesome power of the propaganda mills as the web of journalistic lies endangers the entire nation.

War Propaganda

Following the end of World War Two, the Rockefeller Foundation awarded an initial grant of $139,000 to the Council on Foreign Relations to be used in preventing the "journalistic de-bunking of World War Two" such as that which followed World War One. The fact is that World War One was never de-bunked—if it had been, there would never have been World War Two. The propaganda mills began turning out the childish prattle that wars are caused by poverty and ignorance—and the American mind had been so completely conditioned that the idea was generally accepted. Nobody seemed competent to ask: just how can the poor and the ignorant launch major wars—what would they use for money? Or more to the point, how far would they get if the bankers and munitions makers opposed them? The cause of wars obviously is greed and lust for power. The wealthiest men in the world are those who have instigated wars. In this country, from the beginning, wars, except for the Revolutionary War, have been fought to enrich the instigators. Propaganda and an "incident," always contrived, create public acceptance and support for the wars and bloodletting of international finance.

The monetary system of the United States created by the Constitution of the United States, provided that Congress should coin the money and regulate its value. It was a flat repudiation of the moth-eaten European monarchical system known as Central Banking. In the latter system, private citizens, mostly bankers and munitions makers, coined and regulated the value of the money, and, in turn, the credit and earnings of the people. The Founding Fathers changed that by placing the power of our money and credit with the People's Congress.

This was not only unsatisfactory to wealthy men of banking background in the U. S.; it was most unsatisfactory to all the Central Bankers in Europe. Our system was a serious threat to theirs. The Central Banking interests had friends in Congress; and as our nation prospered, bankers of England, France and Germany schemed to influence our Government to adopt their system. The people, in those days, knew about the workings of the Central Banking System, and would not have permitted a change. A war was plainly indicated. Slavery was decided upon as an issue, and the propaganda machines of New York and Boston went into operation, with newspapers and magazines leading the attack with a view of dividing the North and the South. A war would need foreign financing, and it was agreed that Britain should finance the North, and, to some extent, the South also; and France would finance the Confederacy.

As the war progressed both Britain and France began raising the interest rates until finally Lincoln was faced with a demand for 28 percent. This drove Lincoln to return to direct Congressional coinage—currency known as "Green Backs"—United States Notes, some of which are still in circulation. This action was received with consternation in Western Europe and, as the European Bankers prepared to launch a naval attack on the United States from Tampico, Mexico, the Czar of Russia, Alexander 2nd, sent the Russian fleet for the use of President Lincoln. The Civil War came to a speedy end. In an effort to repay the Czar for expenses resulting from his friendly gesture, the United States quietly purchased what was considered a worthless piece of real estate—Alaska—for the (then) enormous sum of seven and a half million dollars.

Toward the end of the 19th Century Cuba became a rich prize for sugar and banking interests. The propaganda machines proclaimed the ruthless exploitation of the island by Spain. The propaganda war ended with the mysterious sinking of the U.S.S. Maine in Havana Harbor. Spain denied responsibility and held that the scuttling had been an inside job. The bankers got their war; we went to war with Spain and when the smoke had cleared, New York speculators had taken over the exploitation of Cuba.

World War One broke out in Europe when the Sultan of Turkey granted the Kaiser of Germany a right to build the Berlin to Bagdad Railway, which would have permitted Germany to intrude into the rich markets of Britain in the Far East. The assassination of members of the Austrian royal family was the "incident" used to begin operations.

For several years prior to the outbreak of war in Europe the "Wolves of Wall Street"—mostly bankers and munitions makers including John D. Rockefeller, the J. P. Morgan Company, Kuhn, Loeb & Company, Otto Kahn, Jacob Schiff, Edward A. Harriman, Cleveland Dodge (the Munitions King and "bagman" for the Woodrow Wilson campaign) connived with the Central Bankers of Europe to impose the Central Banking System upon the Government and People of the United States. A member of the Warburg banking family of Germany was dispatched to the United States, where, with the aid of Senator Nelson Aldrich, grandfather of Nelson A. Rockefeller, a plan was devised to have a small group of (mostly Eastern) Congressmen remain in Washington while the balance of Congress was on the way home for the Christmas holidays and "adopt" the Federal Reserve Act. By law this Act would have required an amendment to the Constitution and when Congress returned to Washington a tremendous fight was waged to repeal it, but war came to Europe and the Money Trust prevailed.

The newly established Central Bank began financing both sides in the war and in the early days the bankers appeared to favor Warburg's Germany. The immigrant Paul Warburg had become head of the Federal Reserve System and his brother was chief security officer in the German government. The Federal Reserve group promptly began collecting and financing a strange army of revolutionaries, headed by Leon Trotsky (in New York), while at the same time another similar band was being trained and financed by the Warburgs of Germany (in Switzerland). The latter group was led by Lenin. When the training was completed the German Warburg brother arranged for the transportation of the two revolutionary groups through Germany in sealed cars and on into Russia, where in time they overthrew the government of Russia and murdered the Czar and his family. By this time the United States had been lured into the war and Russia was our own ally.

"Snowed" Into World War One

A radical political movement known as Zionism had surfaced in Eastern Europe with a stated objective of establishing a national homeland for the Jews of the world in Palestine. Few Jews supported the movement, and some Christians did. At the time Palestine was part of the Turkish Empire and the Sultan of Turkey was hostile to the Zionist movement. As the war progressed German submarines severely hampered British shipping and Britain began to seek out allies. The Arab States were contacted and promised by Prime Minister Asquith that, if they would attack Turkey and force it out of the war, the British would guarantee Palestine as a free nation under Arab control. The Arabs accepted and carried out their part of the agreement.

But British fortunes continued to decline and the Zionists sent a commission to Lloyd George with a scheme, which was to become known as the Balfour Declaration, offering to secure, through wealthy New York Zionists, participation of the United States in the war against Germany. In keeping with British tradition, the Arabs were double-crossed, and the Zionist offer accepted.

At the end of the war Britain attempted to force the Zionist associates into Palestine but was unable to make significant progress and gradually backed out of a sticky situation.

While efforts were going forth in the United States to involve us in the war, no "incident" had arisen. The Kaiser was scrupulously careful to do nothing that would arouse the people of the United States. A British ship, the Lusitania, had been attacked and sunk with many Americans aboard two years before we declared war on Germany. The ship was carrying large supplies of war material mostly from the Cleveland Dodge munitions factories. The German government had published large notices in the New York newspapers warning Americans that the ship would probably be sunk, but many elected to take the chance. Germany denied responsibility for the sinking and, despite the published warning, many people, including members of Congress believed them.

The propaganda machines began screaming loudly but public sentiment remained opposed to war to the end. The bankers and war lords met frequently in New York City to plan our entry into the war, and had gone so far as to establish and finance in Plattsburg, New York, an Officers Training Camp. By this time the Zionist "deal" had been arranged for a settlement in Palestine, and the sympathies of the international Money Trust were with Britain. Never can it be said that World War One was caused by poverty and ignorance.

Despite the propaganda and the pressure of alien interests, the American People were unalterably opposed to this war. The Wilson Administration, under the baleful influence of the Zionists Colonel House and Lewis D. Brandeis, was searching frantically for an "incident." Finally a rumor that the Germans had sunk the British Ship Sussex in the English Channel killing about eighty Americans was spread throughout the Government. President Wilson recalled our Ambassador to Germany, and sent the German ambassador packing. He then went before Congress and announced that a state of war existed between the United States and Germany. When the deed was done it was learned that the Sussex had not been sunk and no American lives had been lost. As the war progressed the international financiers and war lords moved into top positions for conduct of the war: Chairman of Federal Reserve Board, War Production Board, War Munitions Board, Special Advisers to the President.

Deep "Snow" For World War Two

Events leading up to World War Two followed much the same pattern as those preceding World War One. Impossible penalties had been levied against Germany at the end of World War One and all efforts on the part of both victors and vanquished failed to solve the resulting problems and tensions. The international bankers began financing German politicians in building up another war machine, and this, in turn, relieved the unemployment, and brought a growing popularity for Hitler and his minions. The Federal Reserve policy of shipping millions of dollars in gold to Germany had resulted, as revealed in the great impeachment speech of Banking and Currency Committee Chairman, Louis MacFadden, in the "Great Depression" of the early thirties. The propaganda machines of the War Lords convinced the American public that the depression was due to falling currencies in Europe, and the schools and universities having performed for so many years for the enrichment and protection of the Money Trust, had not prepared their students to make inquiry and to research the system for themselves.

Following our entry into the European conflict, its vicious objective accomplished, the Zionist Movement transferred its headquarters to the United States, to New York and Washington. The propaganda organs went hog-wild publicizing the "rights" of International Zionism in the Holy Land; mass meetings and demonstrations persisted throughout the war; the most massive pressures were brought to bear upon both Presidents Roosevelt and Truman. Congress was stampeded into adopting resolutions of support for Zionist objectives, all stimulated by a propagandized belief that "WE" were somehow obligated to see that Britain kept her promise to the Zionists.

It must be said for Britain, she was trying to keep the promise made the Zionists for services rendered in World War One; she maintained a large military force in Palestine but it was not enough. The number of refugees pouring into Palestine, and fighting constantly with the Palestinians, made it impossible for Britain to maintain order and finally the British government issued the famous WHITE PAPER, limiting severely the number of Jews to be admitted to Palestine.

The frenzied Zionists then, disregarding completely the crushing demands of World War, literally stormed Washington. They demanded that the United States compel Britain to rescind the White Paper even though the United States had no authority to interfere between Britain and Palestine. They rendered the existence of both Presidents almost unbearable stimulating tons of letters and telegrams from non-Zionist sources as well as from Zionists.

Neither President could be induced to take the action demanded, to declare that the United States recognized Israel as a Jewish STATE. Ill-concealed threats just prior to the 1944 Presidential election persuaded Roosevelt to state this position on one occasion, but upon re-election he went back to his previous position supporting a "Jewish National Home"—not a state.

As the war drew to a close Zionist demands became so obnoxious that President Truman was driven to declare that no more "Zionist extremists" would be admitted for consultation at the White House. The British Mandate for Palestine was about to expire and the Zionists had publicly declared that they would immediately proclaim a Jewish State with or without the consent of the United States. President Truman's old business partner was brought in from Texas to persuade the President to meet with Zionist leaders and as a result the President was served with notice that, "Israel would be born" at 6:01 P.M. May 15, 1948 and suggesting that the United States be first to recognize the "New State." At 6:11 P.M. May 15, 1948 the President recognized the State of Israel.

The United Nations had been debating the partition of Palestine and was having extreme difficulty in getting a vote favorable to the Zionists. The completely unexpected action of the President, taking the Secretary General and our own delegation by surprise, disorganized the UN debate. The United Nations then took over the thankless task of Britain and the United States with no better success than the former negotiators. Every suggestion made by the United States during the trying war years had been arrogantly rejected by the Zionists. Almost every suggestion, request or resolution of the United Nations has been similarly rejected. They were determined to have their way regardless of the interests of others. President Truman, in expressing the American view of the partition of Palestine stated:

that we want to let as many Jews into Palestine as it is possible to get into that country. Then the matter will have to be worked out diplomatically with the British and the Arabs, so that if a State can be set up there they may be able to set it up on a peaceful basis. I HAVE NO DESIRE TO SEND 500,000 AMERICAN SOLDIERS THERE to make peace in Palestine. (Caps added)

As had been freely predicted by those opposed to the partition of Palestine, and these were in the majority of interested persons everywhere, there was to be no peace in Palestine. The UN partition gave 60 percent of the best lands in Palestine to the Zionists, leaving the balance to the Arabs whose properties were ruthlessly confiscated in violation of the Balfour Agreement and the UN Partition agreements. The Zionists have consistently, and in defiance of numerous UN denunciations, continued to expand into Arab territory.

The whole Palestine situation was accomplished by the most brazen lies, and is maintained by the same measures. Propaganda has lied the United States into a series of wars instigated by those who provide very little of the manpower, but capitalize on the sacrifices of others. As the propaganda for American involvement on behalf of "tiny Israel," a lie made from the whole cloth, concerns an alleged "six million" Jews murdered by Hitler or in "Hitler's ovens." Any credibility given this story must be based on the assumption that there had been at least six million Jews in Germany before the slaughter began, but such is the paralyzing effect of propaganda, that no questions are asked and no proof demanded. And so for the record!

A pamphlet was issued some years ago by B'nai B'rith entitled "After the Holocaust," presenting a chart showing the number of Jews in Europe in 1939 (9,739,200) and the number in Europe in 1947 (3,920,100). In other words the six million (difference between 1939 and 1947) were exterminated (a favorite term) by Hitler. In view of the pressures mounting through the propaganda media for United States involvement in the troubles, the Zionists insisted, in defiance of all United States persuasion, upon bringing upon themselves, Americans should be getting the FACTS. We have been lied into two wars to establish Israel. Congress is under tremendous pressure to get into it again with or without an "incident." The American Jewish Year Book, 1947-1948, publishes (page 740) a chart similar to that referred to above and which is reproduced on the next page for careful study and evaluation.

In 1939-40 the eastern part of Poland, Bessarabia and Bukovina, and the Baltic states were incorporated into the USSR. About two million Jews were concentrated in these territories. The total number of Jews within the boundaries of the Soviet Union before the outbreak of the Russo-German war in June 1941 can therefore be taken as about 5,500,000.

You will note that the Jewish population of all Europe was about nine million and that more than three million of those were in Poland and another three million in Russia. This Year Book was issued before the "six million" propaganda became fashionable, following the Nuremberg trials and the fantastic assessment of reparations against Germany for the deaths of the "six million." The Germans got this assessment paid, somehow, probably with American money, but in the light of the charts published by official Jewish sources it becomes a question as to whether Germany is entitled to a rebate. As for those who lost their lives and freedoms as result of the Nuremberg trials based mostly on the tale of the "six million," no good can come from their ghastly sacrifice so long as the facts are suppressed.

As the German armies grew in number and strength, Hitler began annexing territories predominately German and in time turned his attention to Poland. For years Hitler had been trying to persuade Poland to open up the Polish Corridor created by the victors of World War One, and which divided Germany. The Poles, urged by Britain and the United States, consistently refused to cooperate, even when Hitler offered to build at German expense a railroad through the territory.

Anticipating that the Germans would turn their fury upon Poland, Britain and the United States and to lesser extent, France, encouraged the Poles to defy Germany, promising to support Poland in any military action against Germany. The invasion of Poland was the "incident" which caused Britain to declare war on Germany. But "Perfidious Albion" again betrayed a little nation. France was unable to keep her commitment and the United States, still holding to Constitutional principles, could not take military action without the consent of Congress. The invasion of Poland was not sufficient provocation to obtain public support for a war in Europe. Something far more drastic would have to be found to constitute the necessary "incident."

The Pearl Harbor "Incident"

The War Lords of international finance were providing money and munitions of war for both sides while they studied the course of events. Again Britain ran into trouble and the leaders of the Zionist Movement renewed their offer under the Balfour Declaration, to use their influence in the United States to bring United States into the war. The Balfour agreement was restored and Britain was committed to establishing a "home-land" in Palestine for the Jews of the World. The War Lords of New York would devise an "incident."

President Roosevelt, with a flair for military posture, obtained much, if not all, of his advice from Mr. Bernard Baruch, a Zionist. He took a stand on the side of Britain and France and proceeded to antagonize Germany at every opportunity. Nothing worked. Hitler, like the Kaiser, was determined to give the United States no excuse for war against Germany. The Allied position had been deteriorating seriously and the War Lords of New York were obliged to cut off German credits and shipments while details of the Balfour agreement were worked out. All plans for enticing Germany having failed, at the suggestion of the British Cabinet Roosevelt turned his attention to the "back door of Japan."

The Council on Foreign Relations power-house in New York had created an affiliate, the Institute of Pacific Relations which began cooperation with the Sorge Spy Ring in the Pacific. Some of the most important policy makers of the United States Government were transferred to this operation which in time neutralized the Japanese government and raised up the infamous Japanese War Cabinet headed by Tojo. The Washington Government instituted a systematic program of provocation against Japan, including the freezing of Japanese assets in the United States, and finally cutting off the Japanese oil supply. We were strangling Japan, and to what purpose? Nothing very definite. Some obviously impossible demands had been made upon Japan to gain time while the United States Pacific Fleet could be manipulated into the "sitting duck" posture being prepared by the masters of the Institute of Pacific Relations and the Sorge Spy Ring.

The propaganda apparatus had been brain-washing the American public with tall tales of Hitler's abominations and of his promise to take care of the United States after he had cleaned up in Europe. But never a word of warning about Japan and Tojo. Much of the American public remembered the atrocity stories relevant to the Germans during World War One, stories proved to have been utterly false and circulated for the purpose of enticing the United States into that war. It was going to take far more than unsubstantiated charges to induce the American public to fall into this trap again.

The propaganda press continued to fulminate against Germany, while consciously concealing the activities in Washington driving full speed ahead toward war with Japan. The Pacific Fleet had been moved from its safe berth in San Diego to the open waters of Pearl Harbor. When the Commander, Admiral James O. Richardson, protested the move, he was summarily dismissed from command and replaced by Admiral Husband E. Kimmel. The Japanese codes had been broken and by December 6, 1941, the President and his "War Cabinet" knew, almost to the hour, the time when the bombs would fall on Pearl Harbor. Not a word of warning was sent to the commanders in Pearl Harbor until after the Japs had gone, leaving our Pacific Fleet at the bottom in Pearl Harbor and three thousand young Americans dead. The "incident" had occurred in much the same fashion as the Tonkin Gulf "incident" which brought us to war in Viet Nam. The Government had war "thrust" upon it by a criminal action of Japan, and so we went promptly to war with Germany. Japan could wait—and did—for another two years.

At this point in history Britain was obligated under the Balfour Declaration to turn Palestine over to the Zionists. It was not theirs to give, but a deal is a deal. The Zionists had gotten the United States into war and Britain must find a way to pay up. Before going into the matter of the "pay-off," we should anticipate the old trite charge, "anti-Semitism." The word is in itself the product of propaganda. The Zionists themselves are anti-Semites. The ARABS ARE SEMITES; and the Zionist persecution of the Arabs marks the Zionists as anti-Semites. It is highly questionable whether Zionists are of a Semitic race, their numbers including persons of all races.

At a time when the propaganda mediums, politicians, misguided clergy, educators and assorted misinformed citizens are clamoring for action against the Semitic Arabs, we hold it is a solemn obligation on the part of anyone knowing the truth about other wars which have taken the lives of hundreds of thousands of American young men TO SPEAK UP, loud and clear. We have no more young lives to give fighting other people's wars. The time to say this, IS NOW. Britain has paid a heavy price for her perfidy; let us benefit from her disastrous experience, heed George Washington's sage advice, stay out of foreign wars.

The chart shown in the American Jewish Committee Year Book (1947-48) should be studied carefully. It shows that in 1939 there were 240,000 Jews in Germany, 3,250,000 in Poland, and 3,020,000 in the Soviet Union. On page 394 of this Year Book we find that in 1940 the Soviet Union annexed Eastern Poland, Bessarabia, Bukovina and other Baltic states, adding 2,500,000 Jews to the 3,020,000 reported for the previous year (1939). The Soviet Union then had at the end of 1940, at least five and one half million Jews within its borders. The chart shows the number of Jews in Russia in 1947 to be two million, leaving 3,500,000 unaccounted for by U.S.S.R.

The number of Jews coming into the United States through customs in those years was reported in the World Almanac for 1966 as 3,632,000, not counting those coming in through Canada and Latin American countries. The United States, then, has accounted for far more than the remainder of the "six million." There was no "six million"—there could not possibly have been. This fact should be thoroughly understood by the American people at a time when the myth of the "six million" is being used to stir emotional sentiment for support for "tiny Israel" in its war against the Arabs. The pressures applied to the Washington Government by Zionists in World War One and World War Two must be remembered and Americans must inform their representatives in Washington that the pressures must be resisted. Only TRUTH loudly proclaimed can keep us free of involvement in a war resulting from Zionist determination to take over Palestine against the will of former administrations and of the United Nations which eventually was forced to succumb to similar pressures.

"Snow" In Korea

Bearing in mind the evacuation of United Nations forces from Palestine prior to the outbreak of the 1967 Palestine war, we can see a similar pattern in the Korean situation. Following the end of World War Two a United Nations force, mostly American, occupied South Korea for protection against North Korea. On December 12, 1948, this force was ordered out by a General Assembly Resolution (No. 195). As these forces were withdrawn, according to a State Department report, "The Truth About Soviet Involvement in the Korean War," the flow of Russian equipment to Korea increased during the period immediately preceding the initial attack, the flow of Russian "advisers increased with it."

When the United Nations voted for the Korean War a Russian general named Vasiliev was CHAIRMAN of the United Nations Military Staff Committee. General Vasiliev promptly sought and obtained a leave of absence and went to Korea where he was in charge of activities north of the 38th parallel. This has been admitted by the State Department and raises the question as to what was the real purpose behind the Korean War. The United Nations had called upon "Member Nations" to provide troops for the Korean venture and the bulk of the armed forces came from the United States. If we may assume that the United Nations anticipated this, or knew in advance where the troops would come from, an interesting channel of thought opens up.

There was no desire to win this war either, nor did the actual conduct of the war indicate that pushing the North Koreans back beyond the 38th parallel was a prime objective. It is apparent that General MacArthur wanted to win the war and attack the Red Chinese beyond the Yalu in the effort. But this was a United Nations war and conduct of that war was decided in UN headquarters. The United Nations Special Representative Lt. Col. Alfred Katzin, was with MacArthur's headquarters in the field and from that vantage point he kept the UN informed and received UN instructions before MacArthur did.

The experiences of Cuba, World War One, World War Two, and Tonkin Gulf justify oft betrayed Americans in questioning whether the whole war had been planned as a blitz defeat for the United States men serving in a United Nations army. Orders from a military command in New York had obliged the commanding officers in the field to lead their troops into a trap. Apparently General MacArthur did not suspect the importance of Colonel Katzin's position as Personal Representative to Trygvie Lie, nor in his loyalty to the United Nations suspect that it was Katzin and not the British nor the State Department who was providing full and complete information as to plans and orders to the "enemy" before he, MacArthur received them. In his "Reminiscences" General MacArthur tells a story of deceit and treachery never revealed in the communications media.

As recorded in "Reminiscences," when the North Koreans crossed the 38th parallel, President Truman ordered MacArthur to take charge and act in support of the South Korean armed forces. In a later message he was directed "no action I took to protect South Korea should prejudice the protection of Japan." The General's responsibility for Japan, then, would guarantee less concentration on Korea. The messages relayed THROUGH Washington served effectively to obscure the point of command which was in United Nations headquarters.

The Security Council resolution calling up armed forces was adopted on June 27, 1950. Two days later General MacArthur flew into South Korea and found the furiously burning capitol city abandoned, with the "South Korean forces in complete and disorganized flight" . . . I watched for an hour, states General MacArthur, "the pitiful evidence of the disaster I had inherited. In that brief interval on the blood-soaked hill, I formulated my plans. They were desperate plans indeed, but I could see no other way except to accept a defeat which would include not only Korea, but all of continental Asia." That plan was for the Inchon Landing which was to get the United States forces, still in Japan, landed behind the enemy lines. Upon his return to Japan the General dispatched U.S. troops as fast as possible while he prepared for the Inchon Landing. Then followed a series of amazing manoeuvres directed through Washington which were designed for defeat of the armed forces in South Korea which were fighting at the base of the peninsula with their backs to the sea. It was a choice between surrender and annihilation, unless help should come speedily; holding the position until the Inchon Landing would be accomplished.

As General MacArthur describes it: "I was amazed when the message of desperate need for the necessary strength to implement a Washington decision was disapproved by Washington itself. The reasons given were that: (1) no increase in any part of the armed services had been authorized by the UN; (2) a suitable United States military posture in other parts of the world had to be maintained; (3) there was a shortage of shipping . . . I repeated my original request. It was again disapproved." At this crucial point in history President Truman sent the incendiary to put out the fire. The President stated: "At my direction, my assistant W. Averell Harriman will leave here Friday, 4 August, by air to confer with you in Tokyo on political aspects of Far Eastern situation. Announcement of mission will be made here . . ."

On July 23, less than a month from the beginning of hostilities, General MacArthur cabled Washington requesting permission for the Inchon Landing and stressing that the safest time for this perilous mission would be mid-September when the tides would be most favorable. There was no reply for THREE WEEKS then a message from the Joint Chiefs of Staff informed the General that the Army Chief of Staff, General Joseph Collins, and Chief of Naval Operations would come to Tokyo to discuss the matter. As the General stated it: "It was evident immediately upon their arrival that the actual purpose of their trip was not so much to discuss as to dissuade." The "dissuaders," however, were overcome by the General's logic and returned to Washington to advise that, "We concur, after reviewing the information brought back by General Collins and Admiral Sherman, in making preparations and executing a turning movement by amphibious forces on the west coast of Korea—at Inchon.

"By a week before target date all the details of the master plan had been worked out . . . each unit had been assigned its separate responsibility, and those marines and soldiers who were not already afloat along Korea's west coast were in the final stages of embarkation. It was at this eleventh hour that I received a message from the Joint Chiefs of Staff which chilled me to the marrow of my bones. The message expressed doubts of success and implied the whole movement should be abandoned." The General replied stating his position in warning tone and received a prompt reply from the Joint Chiefs of Staff announcing that in view of his reply they had approved the operation and

"so informed the President." Said General MacArthur, "I interpreted this to mean that it had been the President who had threatened to interfere and overrule, on a professional military problem, his own military advisers." Before the President had time to interfere further, General MacArthur acting on this approval of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, launched the fabulously successful Inchon Landing, saving, for the time, a perilous situation. It is quite apparent that the commanders in the Armed Forces, much less the public, at the time did not understand that the supreme command of a United Nations army was in UN headquarters in New York and that the President served in the capacity of messenger boy between the UN headquarters and the Joint Chiefs of Staff. The direct connection between the UN and MacArthur and Colonel Katzin.

What follows, as related by General MacArthur, is extremely pertinent to the situation in Viet Nam; history has been repeating with no warning from the communications media. Following the Inchon Landing a meeting was arranged between President Truman and General MacArthur at Wake Island. The meeting was very friendly—deceptively so. The President awarded the General a citation and the Distinguished Service Medal and within a week sent him a letter of high commendation. The General replied expressing the hope that those who had been interested in breaching relations between them would abandon the thought, but, as he said, "my hope was futile. Propaganda and prejudice reigned supreme." The President had been accompanied to Wake Island by a motley crew representing the very leadership of MacArthur's enemies: Army Secretary Frank Pace, a Council on Foreign Relations agent, UN Ambassador (now American Delegate to the World Court) Philip Jessup (CFR); Dean Rusk (CFR); Averell Harriman (CFR) and a few others of similar persuasion.

Five days later the Eighth Army assaulted and captured the enemy capital at Pongyang and said MacArthur, "its fall symbolized the complete defeat of North Korea." Reciting matters of concern about moving food and supplies, he said, "We were worried, too, by the growing indication of a startling buildup of Red Chinese troops in Manchuria.

"I was even more worried by a series of directives from Washington which were greatly decreasing the potential of my air force. First, I was forbidden 'hot' pursuit of enemy planes that attacked our own. Manchuria and Siberia were sanctuaries of inviolate protection for all enemy forces and for enemy purposes, no matter what depredations or assaults might come from there. Then I was denied the right to bomb the hydroelectric plants along the Yalu. The order was broadened to include every plant in North Korea which was capable of furnishing electric power to Manchuria and Siberia . . . Most incomprehensible of all was the refusal to let me bomb the important supply center at Racine, which was not in Manchuria or Siberia, but many miles from the border in northeast Korea. Racine was a depot to which the Soviet Union forwarded supplies from Vladivostok for the North Korean army."

Thus was the groundwork established for the Second War in Korea against the hordes of protected forces from Red China.

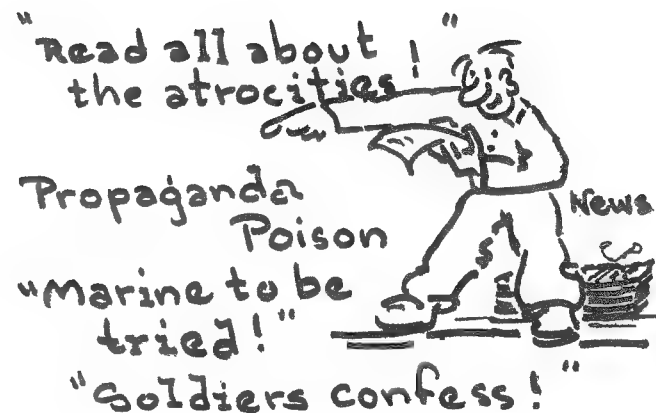

At this time it was painfully apparent that those in UN headquarters carrying out the decisions of the Money Trust and War Lords of the Council on Foreign Relations and their international banker associates in Europe, that it would be extremely dangerous to have a man of MacArthur's courage and resourcefulness in charge of a military action of planned destruction.

When permission was asked for the bombing of the Yalu bridges, over which supplies for the North Korean and Red Chinese armies were being transported, it was refused and later modified to permit the bombing of the "Korean end of the Yalu bridges." When General MacArthur consulted General Stratemyer, Commander of the Air Force in Korea, General Stratemyer said: "It cannot be done—Washington must have known it cannot be done." Other commanders held the same view, but the fantastic directive stood, a pattern which is followed consistently in Viet Nam. General MacArthur tells of a young bomber pilot, wounded and with the stump of an arm dangling at his side asking him, "General, which side are Washington and the United Nations on?" By this time General Vasiliev of the Russian army was directing North Korean forces. There is no question of whose side this Chairman of the UN Military Staff Committee was on. They were all on the side of North Korea and China. Nothing more clearly illustrates the part Washington and the UN were playing than a resolution SPONSORED BY THE UNITED STATES which states: "Affirms that it is the policy of the United Nations to hold the Chinese frontier with Korea inviolate and fully to protect legitimate Chinese and Korean interests in the frontier zone . . ."

This treasonous proposal to guarantee sanctuary across the Yalu and to PROTECT Chinese and Korean interests in that area was VETOED by the Soviet Union, but, in consonance with UN practices, it was put into effect anyway. If we cannot find any logical explanation for the performances of official Washington in Viet Nam, we can at least find a precedent for them in the Korean War.

That there was a leak in intelligence (from Katzin to Trygvie Lie) was apparent not only to General MacArthur but to other commanders in the field who reported that their plans were revealed to the enemy, as they thought, through sources in Washington. If there had been any intent or desire for victory in Korea, General MacArthur spoke the thoughts of millions of Americans when he said that if the United States government had informed the Chinese and North Koreans that they would send in sufficient men and materials to do the job, the Chinese and North Korean government would have had no choice but to end the war. The only flaw in this reasoning was that the Korean War was not a United States war—it was a United Nations war—and UN headquarters, with its Soviet military secretariat, was calling the shots.

"Snow" In Viet Nam

When the French pulled out of South Viet Nam President Eisenhower sent a group of Americans in to "observe and advise." The number of such gradually escalated under President Kennedy and the American people had become restless and bitter as the escalation continued under President Johnson. Clearly an "incident" was needed to continue this policy. On August 7, 1964, President Johnson notified a joint session of Congress that two of our large destroyers had been "attacked" by some little PT boats belonging to North Viet Nam in the Tonkin Gulf and he sought "under the authority of the United States Constitution and the Charter of the United Nations," a Joint Resolution authorizing him to, in effect, do as he wished in Southeast Asia. A knee-sprung Congress obliged him without any serious question. Later it was found that there was absolutely no evidence that the PT boats or anything else had "attacked" the destroyers, and a total of more than a million men have been sent into a full scale war in Viet Nam.

The propaganda machines have not been able to produce a satisfactory explanation for our involvement in a war ten thousand miles away against an opponent who had never antagonized us. Congress has not been able to learn from the Executive, State, or Defense Departments just HOW we can get into war without a declaration of war by Congress. The answer to this enigma lies in the subject of the most expensive and outrageous propaganda "snow job" in history, the United Nations. Article 39 of the UN charter places with the UN Security Council, and NOT CONGRESS, authority to determine when cause for war exists, when and where it will be fought and who will do the fighting.

The authority of the United Nations in the disastrous Korean War was clear. United Nations participation in the war in Viet Nam is obscure. In Korea General Douglas MacArthur was Commander-in-the-Field although his UN official title was Commander in Chief. General MacArthur regarded the President of the United States as his Commander in Chief and because his reports were handled by Colonel Katzin, the General had no way of knowing exactly who received those reports and resulting orders. It was a most confusing situation.

It is difficult to determine just WHO is the Katzin in Viet Nam. There is no question of who receives and issues the orders for Viet Nam. The State Department has confirmed that:

"... regarding the meeting of our obligations under Article 54 of the Charter of the United Nations with respect to Viet Nam. The Government of the United States has informed the Security Council promptly and fully on all of our major activities in Viet Nam."

The Soviet delegate to the Security Council, as a Permanent Member, certainly has access to all such information and as chief security officer of the Security Council he has top priority. The strange language of propaganda is such that inquiry concerning this quotation brings from Congressmen and Senators, taking their advice from State and Defense Department heads who, they know, have lied to them consistently for many years, expect their constituents to accept the self-serving declaration that we certainly do not inform the Security Council on any important matters. What, then, do the words "promptly and fully of all our major activities" mean? We believe it means exactly what it says and results are there to prove it. In view of the relatively small number of men engaged in combat in Viet Nam, the majority being engaged in a form of involuntary servitude known as "pacification," the death rate is entirely out of proportion to any situation except that which we encountered in Korea—advance information coming from a high source—the Security Council of the United Nations.

Now we must examine the recognized control features of the Viet Nam war; those most closely identified with it: Dean Rusk, Robert McNamara, Averell Harriman (again), Henry Cabot Lodge, General Maxwell Taylor, General Lansdale, General Westmoreland, Ellsworth Bunker—all are members of the Council on Foreign Relations. General Abrams may or may not be a member, but it can be asserted without fear of successful contradiction, that he would not be there unless the C.F.R. wanted him there.

This is putting the background before the foreground, but it is well to keep in mind these pertinent facts as we explore the reason for our involvement in the Viet Nam war and our "solemn treaty commitments" with other foreign nations to keep us in a continual state of war. In order to evade the VETO provisions of the United Nations Charter, the General Assembly, in 1950, adopted a resolution extending to itself the unlimited authority of the Security Council and since that time has been legislating by resolution in every field of endeavor.

A resolution of the General Assembly is recognized by the Executive and Judicial branches of the government in Washington as binding upon the United States. The resolutions are sent down to the heads of State who are bound by treaty commitment, to put them into effect within their borders.

In order to consolidate their international money control the international bankers who control the United Nations, have decided that all wealth must be lodged in the United Nations International Monetary Fund. The gold and silver of the United States and of many other countries has now found the way to the Fund. But the gold and diamonds of South Africa and Rhodesia pose a problem to the Empire Builders. Again using the race business as lever, the United Nations has consistently, from its first General Assembly meeting in 1946, condemned South Africa and later, Rhodesia, for APARTHEID. If they could get the "one man one vote" system established in those countries they could handle the Blacks and the gold and diamonds.

After the Tonkin Gulf "incident" was provided for escalation of the Vietnamese war, the Congress adopted a "Sense of the Congress" resolution authorizing the President to do as he pleased in Southeast Asia. As soon as this resolution was adopted—within a few days—the United Nations commissioned the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace to prepare a war plan for the invasion of South Africa. In due time the plan was submitted under the title "Apartheid and United Nations Collective Measures," and calling for a blitz attack against South Africa.

Subsequently the United Nations adopted a General Assembly Resolution calling for the invasion and conquest of Southwest Africa and prepared for a call-up of armed forces of Member nations. The war plan had made it clear that the invasion would have to be accomplished by one of the TWO Great Powers. The United States had inducted, trained and battle-tested a million-man army conveniently located in Southeast Asia. Fortunately for our veterans, Congress got wind of this, and has forced a suspension, for the time, of plans for invasion of South Africa. The Congressional attitude toward military support for Israel might be a little different. Only time will tell. And the awesome power of propaganda will be felt in Washington.

World Wide "Snow Job"

When President Johnson spoke of taking from the "haves" and giving to the "have nots" he was speaking of "haves" and "have nots" worldwide. Beginning at home we can see how this "snow job" works. Actually it is taken from the "have nots" in the form of withholding taxes from their wages and the taxes on their daily bread and given to the "haves" through tax loopholes and tax exempt Foundations. The taxes of the workers have been transferred to the World Bank to be drawn out by the various United Nations agencies and "invested" in a multi-billion dollar "pre-investment structure" upon which the international bankers and war lords have built an overseas industrial empire. The products of the low wage industries established by the international Money Trust are now flooding American markets in such volume as to force millions of Americans out of much needed jobs. These millions must not be antagonized—not yet—and so the rulers of our destiny suggested to the servile Congress that a law be passed levying more taxes on the employed, to pay wages to those forced out of work by the "Kennedy Round"—the tariff elimination devised by its predecessor—UNCTAD (United Nations Conference on Trade and Development). The gold and silver stocks, the property of the producing "have nots," have been shipped out of the country and into the coffers of the billionaire internationalists in control of the UN International Monetary Fund (CFR Frank A. Southard, Jr., Deputy Managing Director Pierre Paul Schweitzer, Rothschild banker, Managing Director and Chairman of the Executive Board).

The first claim for wages under the "Kennedy Round" has been settled by the Federal Trade Commission. The 600 steel workers filing the claim were awarded three million dollars, an average of $5,000 each. There are more than 940,000 claims still pending—with layoffs merely beginning. There is no place to get the money to settle these claims except from the earnings of those still employed. Surely the Federal hand in the workers' pockets must begin to burn.

Depression Snow

In 1929 the rug was suddenly pulled out from under the economy and the Great Depression took over. The propaganda organs of the Money Trust had a glib explanation: the crumbling currencies of other nations had resulted in decline of the dollar. The truth was that the Federal Reserve System, is NOT a branch of the Government as propaganda has led us to believe, but is the property of PRIVATE bankers who claim to act in the capacity of "fiscal agents" for the government. In 1949 the country was on the gold standard, which limited the currency supply to four times the value of the gold in the Federal Reserve vaults, and for every million dollars of gold which was shipped out of the country, four million dollars of currency had to be withdrawn from circulation. The shipment of gold had ALWAYS been the cause of depressions. When the gold is returned currency is re-issued and prosperity returns to the nation.

During the depression, and before, the Federal Reserve was shipping vast sums of gold to Europe, most of it to Germany in the days when Hitler was coming to power. During those years millions of unemployed Americans were most anxious to work, to produce and to SPEND. The greatest market for goods and services in history was in the United States. The only thing necessary to get the country moving was MONEY and it was the obligation of the Federal Reserve System to provide it. This failure to issue currency into circulation was the CAUSE and the ONLY CAUSE of the depression of the thirties and of all those which preceeded it.

Now the unsuspecting nation is faced with the blood-curdling fact that the gold and silver is all gone and will never return. The planned depression caused by the Kennedy Round is fast descending on a helplessly propaganda-drugged people who may well be dragged into another world war to condition them for acceptance of the domination of the international Money Trust.

A slowly arousing populace has forced the Washington Administration to break up the conscript army and to reduce military expenditures. This is good, but it will hasten the depression, for those released from military and industrial occupations will simply join the army of the unemployed. This is the inevitable consequence of fifty years of propaganda-sustained false prosperity. There really was a bottom to the barrel and we have reached it. The question now is, do we permit the international thieves and murderers who have plunged the country into this pit to go unpunished—rewarded by enslaving us for their own profit—or do we LEARN THE FACTS of our existence and reclaim our heritage?

The interest on the Federal Debt, which was not LEGALLY acquired, is now nearly eighteen BILLION dollars annually. Will the young who inherited this debt continue to pay interest to those who have already robbed their parents and destroyed the economy of the nation? If there is any justification whatever for the incredible sums spent on education in the past quarter century, a rebellious and determined youth will rise up and say NO. The greatest prize of all time is on the block. It will be nobly won or meanly lost by its lawful inheritors. May the sun of truth melt the "SNOWS" of propaganda, as a blood-soaked Age of Treason comes to an end.

If the sins of a wicked nation are not to be visited upon the children of future generations, a chastened people must claim THE PROMISE: (Second Chronicles 7:14)

"If my people which are called by my name, shall humble themselves and pray, and seek my face, and turn from their wicked ways; then will I hear from heaven, and will forgive their sin and will heal their land."
